A 13.2:

Some Areas May Be Closed or Have Services Reduced.
More Specific Information is Available from the Ranger Districts.

The Arizona Wilderness Act of 1984, dated August 28, 1984, designated certain National Forest lands in the State of Arizona as wilderness. These areas are not shown on the following pages in this reprint. A list of the new wildernesses follows with the name of the National Forest of which they are a part. Further information on the areas can be obtained from the appropriate Forest. Addresses and phone numbers are included in this publication.

Apache-Sitgreaves — Bear Wallow, Escudilla

Coconino — Fossil Springs, Kachina Peaks, Munds Mountain, Red Rock-Secret Mountain, Strawberry Crater, West Clear Creek, Wet Beaver

Coronado — Miller Peak, Mt. Wrightson, Pajarita, Rincon Mountain, Santa Teresa

Kaibab — Kanab Creek, Saddle Mountain

Kaibab/Coconino — Kendrick Mountain

Prescott — Apache Creek, Castle Creek, Cedar Bench, Granite Mountain, Juniper Mesa, Woodchute

Tonto — Four Peaks, Hellsgate, Salome, Salt River

Full access to all public lands and facilities, and equal opportunity to use them, are guaranteed to all persons regardless of race, color, national origin, age, sex, religion, physical handicap or marital status. If you feel you have been denied any benefits on these grounds, write directly to the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D.C. 20250.

NATIONAL FORESTS AND GRASSLANDS
SOUTHWESTERN REGION

Welcome to Your Southwestern National Forests

The Southwestern Region of the Forest Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, includes the 12 National Forests in Arizona and New Mexico. Three National Grasslands located in eastern New Mexico, western Oklahoma, and the Texas Panhandle are administered by the Cibola National Forest.

Each National Forest is under the direction of a Forest Supervisor and three to eight District Forest Rangers. Each Ranger is responsible for the on-the-ground multiple use management of a district of from 100,000 to 400,000 acres.

Nearly 21 million acres in these two states—in general, the coolest and best-watered areas in an arid land—make up your Southwestern National Forests (see map, opposite).

As population and leisure increase, recreation becomes a more important use of National Forest lands. Camping, picnicking, hunting, fishing, hiking, horseback riding, mountain climbing, skiing, wilderness and primitive areas, many kinds of water sports, and scenic drives through the National Forests of our Nation are enjoyed by millions of Americans. Recreationists spent nearly 228 million visitor days on National Forests in 1983, 23.6 million of these in the Southwest. Because of this increasing use, the Forest Service recreation management program has become more dependent upon visitor self-service and volunteer assistance to meet the mushrooming demand.

Southwestern National Forests are more than mountain playgrounds. Most of the usable water available to Arizona and New Mexico is produced by National Forest lands. The National Forests also supply timber used by sawmills and a pulpmill. They provide grazing for cattle, sheep, and big game animals (elk, deer, bear, antelope, bighorn sheep, turkey and javelina). Revenues from timber, grazing and other National Forest uses are shared with the states for use in the counties having National Forest land.

User Fees

Recreation use fees are charged for use of many of the recreation sites listed on the following pages. Group permits are required in many areas. Information about permits or fees is available at Ranger Stations and is posted at recreation sites.

Volunteers

The "Volunteers in the National Forest" program provides a means for interested persons to become involved and assist in the conservation work of the Forest. Campground Hosts and Wilderness Information Specialists are just two of the job titles for volunteers who provide a long list of services in the program. The varied tasks are listed under major headings which include public contact and assistance, operation and maintenance, administration, and information and education. Anyone interested in becoming involved in the program should contact one of the Ranger Stations.

Wilderness

The Southwestern National Forests include 25 wildernesses and 1 primitive area, totaling nearly 2 million acres (see descriptions of the individual forest for name of each). These areas are dedicated to preserving a part of our national heritage in its natural state. Roads, motorized travel, logging, resorts, or other commercial developments are not allowed in wildernesses and primitive areas. However, established grazing use is permitted. Anyone able and willing to ride a horse, pack a burro, ski, or just plain hike, may travel over the many trails available. Here one may enjoy the thrill of wilderness hunting, fishing, climbing, camping or relaxing amidst undisturbed beauty.

Wilderness permits are required for overnight visits in the: Gila Wilderness, Pecos Wilderness, and Aldo Leopold Wilderness.

Permits are required for single-day visits in the: Gila Wilderness and Aldo Leopold Wilderness.

The wilderness permit system may be extended to other wildernesses. Wilderness permits may be obtained by mail or picked up at local Forest Service offices. Obtain permits ahead of entry time to avoid delays. See specific forest sections for office locations. These requirements are in effect yearlong, under provision of Title 36, Code of Federal Regulations, Part 261.57a.

Winter Sports

Almost all the developed ski areas in the Southwest are in whole or in part on National Forest administered lands. These include: Sandia Peak, Cibola National Forest; Sierra Blanca and Ski Cloudcroft, Lincoln National Forest; Santa Fe Ski Basin, Santa Fe National Forest; Sipapu, Red River and Taos Ski Valley, Carson National Forest, New Mexico and Mt. Lemmon, Coronado National Forest; Fairfield Snow Bowl, Coconino National Forest, and Bill Williams, Kaibab National Forest, Arizona.

The lift facilities are privately owned and operated under permits issued by the Forest Service. For your safety, ski patrols are on duty during operating hours. Other winter sports activities such as tobogganing, sledding, snowmobiling, cross-country skiing and other forms of snowplay may be enjoyed in many forest areas, especially adjacent to developed sites.

Historical and Archeological Sites

National Forest visitors often encounter historical and archeological sites. These sites are protected by the Antiquities Act of 1906 and the Archeological Resources Protection Act of 1979. Visitors should NOT dig in nor remove any object from these sites. If you encounter someone digging in or vandalizing a site, please report it to the nearest Forest office. Help preserve our cultural heritage for all to enjoy.

Know and Obey the Rules

A new understanding and appreciation of National Forest System lands is urgently needed. Many visitors unknowingly "love the land to death" and while enjoying the freedoms afforded by our recreation resources may cause serious scars of overuse upon the land. We must each develop an ecological conscience or low impact ethic. It has been said that we should "walk softly upon the land, taking only pictures and leaving only footprints." This is a challenge, to leave each place, insofar as is humanly possible, without a trace of your presence, or your passing. We must recognize that a complex ecological interrelationship exists in the forest which can be easily upset, damaged, or even destroyed. Once damaged, some plants and soil may not recover in one or several lifetimes. Sometimes it is necessary to develop sites and travelways to help users enjoy the forest resources while protecting the lands and waters from damage.

Rules and regulations governing the use of developed National Forest recreation sites, as well as dispersed areas, are posted at developed sites and available in pamphlet form at Forest Service offices. These are common sense rules to help increase the enjoyment of all visitors to the National Forests and to protect the natural resources. The rules are enforced and violators may expect penalties.

Also available are pamphlets and interpretive programs to help visitors enjoy their National Forests through better understanding and appreciation. Such programs are available at five visitor centers in the Southwestern Region as well as at numerous other developed sites.

Golden Access/Golden Age Passports

Handicapped and persons older than 62 may receive a free lifetime Golden Access/Golden Age Passport which provides a 50% discount on campground use fees. Passports are available at Forest Service offices, National Parks and Monuments, and Federal Information Centers. Applicants must apply in person and provide proof of handicap or age by Federal certificate, driver's license, or birth certificate as appropriate.

Dispersed Recreation

This directory gives information about developed recreation sites. These sites are heavily used, and the pressure mounts each year. Why not use some of the thousands of acres of National Forest land with little or no development? "Dispersed recreation" pays dividends in restful solitude, freedom from noise, natural scenery, and uncrowded picnicking, camping, fishing or hunting.

Wherever you go, keep all recreation lands clean and attractive for future visitors. Pack out what you pack in. Leave no sign of your visit. Trash left behind not only spoils the environment but can be hazardous to the health of people and wildlife. Be especially alert to possible campfire restrictions and always be careful with fire.

Maps

Detailed 1/2" per mile maps of most National Forests and wildernesses are available for $1 per copy from Forest Service offices on that particular Forest. Also, maps of all Southwestern National Forests are available by mail or in person for $1 per copy from the Forest Service Regional Office, Office of Information, 517 Gold Avenue SW, Albuquerque, New Mexico 87102 (telephone (505) 842-3292).

Notes About Recreation Site Tables

A "family camp unit" usually includes parking space for a vehicle, a table, and a fire pit or fireplace.

"Season of use" is only an approximation of when the site will be open and services provided. Weather, road or site repair, agency finances, or numerous other factors can alter these dates and cause closures. If you need definite dates, check with nearby forest offices.

Only those very few sites marked G (group camping), GP (group picnicking), or GPC (group picnicking and camping) may be reserved for future use. Even these reservation sites may be subject to restrictions such as "no reservations on weekends or holidays." Reservations are usually made at the Ranger District office which administers the site and reservation fees may be charged. All other sites are available on a first-come, first-served basis. All groups planning to occupy a forest area should check with the Ranger District office.

Large motor homes, trailers, and campers should note and benefit from road condition warnings and maximum length recommendations for camp trailers. Forest Service campgrounds are not normally equipped with utility hookups. Sanitary disposal stations and centralized water hydrants are provided to serve many campgrounds as indicated. Direct connections are permitted only at a few individual family units equipped for hookups.

If this guide does not supply all the information you need, call or visit the Forest Service office nearest the area in question.

Prescott National Forest

344 S. Cortez
Prescott, Arizona 86301
(602) 445-1762

1,236,900 acres. Elevation 3,000 to 8,000 feet. Trout fishing in Lynx Lake. Scenic attractions include Thumb Butte, Mingus Mountain, Granite Mountain, Horsethief Basin, the Verde River, Sycamore Canyon Wilderness and Pine Mountain Wilderness. Deer, antelope, turkey, javelina, dove, and quail hunting. Horseback riding, hiking (pack enough water for your entire trip). Scenic drives include: Senator Highway, Mingus Mountain; Walker Road and the Thumb Butte Loop. Some roads are quite primitive and local inquiry should be made, especially after storms. Resorts and motels are located nearby. At middle elevations of the National Forest, such as Prescott, the climate is near perfect the year around. Main recreation season: March through October. Day-night temperature change can be extreme above 6,000 feet. Nights are generally cool. Frequent afternoon showers occur in July and August. Nearby towns: Camp Verde, Chino Valley, Clarkdale, Cottonwood, Jerome, Mayer and Prescott.

Gila National Forest

2610 North Silver Street
Silver City, New Mexico 88061
(505) 388-8201

3,320,135 acres (this includes 614,202 acres of the Apache National Forest in New Mexico that is administered by the Gila). Elevation: 4,500 to 10,892 feet. A vast area of rugged mountain ranges, very little affected by civilization, in southwestern New Mexico. Plants vary from ocotillo and cactus in the plains to juniper, pine, aspen and spruce-fir forests on the high mountains. Contains the Gila, Aldo Leopold and Blue Ridge wildernesses, headwaters of the Gila River, the Mimbres and part of the San Francisco—waters vital to the Southwest. Beautiful trout streams. Lake fishing in Lake Roberts, Snow Lake, Quemado Lake, Bill Evans Lake, Wall Lake and Bear Canyon Reservoir. Canyons 1,000 feet deep. Excellent big game hunting; elk, deer, bear, antelope, turkey. Horseback riding, pack trips. The Catwalk in Whitewater Canyon; Gila Cliff Dwellings; old mines at Kingston, Hillsboro, Pinos Altos; Ben Lilly memorial; gold mining ghost town of Mogollon. Scenic drives: Black Range Highway, State 15, 35, 61, and 78. Recreation season: April-November. Cool to cold nights above 7,000 feet. Frequent afternoon showers July-August. Nearby towns: Glenwood, Reserve, Silver City, Truth or Consequences, Luna, Quemado, and Lordsburg. Wilderness permit required for the Gila Wilderness and Aldo Leopold Wilderness.
